Over time, crops and animals from the Fertile Crescent spread into North Africa and Europe, where they triggered an explosion of civilization. Of the 9 rulers who expanded Aztec control to frontiers way beyond Tenochtitlan, most, but with some poor exceptions, were hugely successful - in particular Ahuitzotl, who ruled for 16 years from and grew the Aztec state into a true empire, reaching from Atlantic to Pacific coasts, and his nephew, the legendary Moctezuma II, who ruled from until when he died a hostage in Spanish hands.

Communications were based on a highly efficient system of couriers running in relays across the country - similar to that of the Inca empire in South America.

He also ordered them to melt down a vast amount of treasure. They taught them Latin and other subjects which are worth a lot more than all the silver taken from them. To obtain the monkeys used in the climactic sequence, Herzog paid several locals to trap monkeys; he paid them half in advance and was to pay the other half upon receipt.
