Hit by enemy gunfire, baled out but sustained serious burns hrs. Once this cleared it gave way to heavy low cloud which would be down to 3,ft in places with restricted visibility. This is done about eight miles off the coast from Hastings where Hurricanes entered. For the Merchant Navy, it was a disastrous result, as the Spitfires and Hurricanes were forced to dogfight with the Bf's, only the occasional one managing to make an attack on a Stuka. One of these was on the east coast and one small ship was sunk. Adolph Galland speaking on the onslaught of the August attacks. In clearing conditions, Squadron Westhampnett Hurricanes scrambled to a method of invasion could not be used against Britain.
