SC Sam Casil Jun 6, You might even be able to explain it right on your resume. Whether it be the number of jobs you apply to on any given day, the number of individuals you reach out to in your personal and professional network, or the number of companies you research in a week, write down these goals on a piece of paper and make sure you check them off each time you accomplish one.

If you are unemployed, try to approach your job search with the mindset of someone who is starting a business. Without it, a company or a nonprofit, for that matter cannot start, operate, grow or stay organized. The more organized you are, the less likely you are to become overwhelmed and fall victim to worst-case scenario or defeatist thinking. This will only prove to make you more marketable in the eyes of your future employer and add to your overall skills and abilities.

If you were ill, injured, or had a family issue to tend to, it's okay to answer honestly. When choosing a job, you should also consider the workplace itself, and whether or not you actually fit in with the rest of your coworkers.
