When things get tough, come back to the simple. I do not think that any civilization can be called complete until it has progressed from sophistication to unsophistication, and made a conscious return to simplicity of thinking and living. Still others take a creative route and improvise prayers that grow naturally out of the moment at hand.

What a unique treasure are the things we have learned to live without, for no other. Little meditations on prayer and food and thankfulness. After one has played a vast quantity of notes and more notes, it is simplicity that emerges as the crowning reward of art. The point of simple living, for me, has got to be:

Beside the noble art of getting things done, there is the noble art of leaving things undone. Italians first came to the lower East Side, and many said that they smelled, Judson opened a health clinic for. Poor food and water for dinner, a bent arm for a pillow – that is where joy resides.
