In the background, partly visible and moored near each other, are the ships of Vanderdecken and Daland; high cliffs above the sea rise some distance away. Erik, a huntsman and suitor of Senta, berates her, condemning her desire to marry the Dutchman as an act of betrayal. Senta protests to the Dutchman, again assuring him that she has been true, a love vowed unto death that will remove his curse.

Senta struggles and frees. Earlier, he had composed his first opera, Guntram but it was a failure, considered a slavish imitation of Wagner. I therefore never thought of contemplating on principle, and as a deliberate reformer, the destruction of the aria, duet, and other operatic forms; but the dropping of those forms followed consistently from the nature of my subjects. We have merely touched the surface of the soul, that is all.

Mary reproaches Senta for her idleness, but the other women excuse her, comme
