This case is slightly less obvious as they are aware of each other. I'm not sure on the validity of it, but I've heard that nazi Germany shooting radio waves off into space might be the first contact an alien will have with messages from earth. It's a minor detail, but I think it makes more sense in this way. Problem being, potentially, that we can see the universe and it's not that hostile. If all humans were to suddenly die, we'd leave a fossil record of about 10 very incomplete bodies and if history is right, if we did discover these bodies, we probably would have assembled them wrong on our first few attempts. But where would you put recreation or community activities? Unsurprisingly, the guy is an astronaut, but his book, Off the Planet, I would have limited communications and with a 12 hr day it's hard to think too deeply about anything. We actually have fossil records of biological life at least 2.
