A lot of people still think classical education is just too hard. Is that true? Yes, classical education does involve a lot of hard work and time, but that shouldn't hide.

"Classical education has three stages of four years each: four years apiece for the grammar, logic, and rhetoric stages"—so I had been told. Since I had not been.

I want to thank you for inviting me to be with you to talk about homeschooling in the classical tradition. I am always happy to talk about homeschooling, because I .

The best way to achieve this is to expose them to various patterns when they are young. A friend once stopped me in the grocery store and said she'd like the five-minute version of my book. The texts don't require much teacher time, and don't belabor points that are easy to grasp.

Ifreelyofferyouthisinsight. Time is like money. In my experience, the student in the rhetorical stage is interested in the high and noble, he cares about what is good and bad, and about what is blameworthy and praiseworthy.
