This led to the question of which were the best possible guides in the quest for the divine. Probably composed in draft, at least, in the years between and it was not actually published until by which time he had absorbed not only the works of Plato, but also those of Plotinus, Iamblichus and Proclus, as well as the Hermetic Corpus, the Hymns of Orpheus, the Chaldaean Oracles which he attributes to Zoroaster and the works of Dionysius the Areopagite. Variorum, X, pp. One might ask, approved by whom? Aylane and her new guardian must go on an adventure to save her best friend and her sister from the Lady Jahar.

Boy, you can't help but get intrigued by what appears to be several typos in a book. The opposite is true in heavenly love:
