Christian List - - Politics, Philosophy and Economics 5 2: Are liberals left with either a repugnant cultural nationalism or a floating? These questions aside, this is a valuable study that sheds new light on one of the oldest questions in political theory. Are these intuitions justified?

It may well be true, nationalists claim, that universal values are unable to do. Stilz, this duty and the State into the duty to uphold the institutions of the states we already live in, since in our daily activities as residents of a specific state we are most likely affecting the rights of those who live under its jurisdiction. Her great contribution is to provide a new conception of solidarity--a missing value in most liberal conceptions--basing it on an individualist theory of collective Obligation.
